Bride and Groom would now like to wash each other's feet. You may be familiar with the idea of washing each others feet from when, before the Last Supper, Jesus washed his disciples feet. Jesus took the place of a servant to show he was no better then they were.

As human beings, we are all equal. In marriage, you are equal partners. There are times when you may stand in awe of the other's greatness and rejoice in each other's triumphs. You may also be draw closer together in times of sadness and defeat when you show unwavering support. This is not only life, it's the reason for marriage. As a married couple you give these experiences depth because you approach them with unconditional love. By washing each other's feet today, you are saying, I don't only stand before you, promising my love with a vow and a ring, but I'm kneeling before you, washing your feet, humbly accepting you as you are, not only with my words, but with my actions. My love is not just a promise, but an unconditional action of love. In your humility, you commit yourselves to each other today as equals. You bring all of who you are, and that is what makes you great together.

Music plays as you wash each other's feet.
