Bride and Groom, you have each chosen to be joined in marriage today. The Bible states that “two are better than one; they receive a good reward for their toil, because, if one fails, the other can help the companion up again.” In my presence and in the presence of your family and friends, you have exchanged vows and made promises. You have opened your hearts to one another, declared your love and friendship, and have united yourself with the exchanging of rings. Therefore, with the blessings of God, it is my pleasure to now pronounce you husband and wife.

You may now kiss the bride!
